

ArcelorMittal South Africa Solidarity Holidays 2012

Day 5: Friday, 30 March 2012

The ArcelorMittal SA Foundation in partnership with Habitat for Humanity hands over 10 houses to needy families in Orange Farm

For one week, from 26 to 30 March ArcelorMittal volunteers have been building homes for low-income families from Orange Farm in Gauteng. The construction process started from scratch – from mixing mortar and laying bricks on the first day to putting up roofs on the last day.

The ArcelorMittal South Africa Foundation today handed over ten newly built houses to families who previously lived in shacks in Orange Farm, South of Johannesburg.

600 local employees were joined by ten international colleagues from countries as varied as Macedonia, Ukraine, France, Spain, Brazil, Argentina, Poland and the Czech Republic in a week long project to build the houses.

The ArcelorMittal Foundation launched the Solidarity Holidays Programme in 2010 to offer ArcelorMittal employees the opportunity of spending part of their annual leave volunteering in a Foundation project overseas.

Maggie Mopedi, Acting Manager, Corporate Social Investment at ArcelorMittal South Africa says it is gratifying that ten more houses could be added to the, 26 houses that have been built in previous years. As a Company we are humbled and equally proud that we have been a part of changing the lives of these families.

Maggie says she is proud of the energy and drive shown by ArcelorMittal staff and their international colleagues. The camaraderie and comradeship makes the hard work so much easier and fun

This year marks the fourth year that the ArcelorMittal South Africa Foundation has partnered with global NGO, Habitat for Humanity to provide homes in one of Gauteng's underdeveloped areas. To date the Foundation has built 36 houses since 2009, the highlight of which was when the keys to her first house were handed to a 101 year old granny four years ago.

Present during this year's Solidarity Holiday - an ArcelorMittal Foundation initiative that encourages employees to spend part of their annual leave in foreign countries helping perform good deeds - was the Foundation's CEO, Ms Felicidad Cristobal.

Trevor Molefe, Gauteng Manager at Habitat for Humanity says the organisation's partnership with ArcelorMittal South Africa has changed lives for the most families in Orange Farm. Trevor says the 36 houses built by the Foundation will provide decent housing to more than 180 people in the area.

Orange Farm is a township 45 kilometres South of Johannesburg. It started as an informal settlement in 1988 and was formally established in 1990. Today, it has almost a million residents. Most of them are on very low incomes, are affected by AIDS and lack access to decent sanitation or water. Habitat South Africa has been working in the area since 1987. To date, it has served almost 1,000 families in the province.

The ArcelorMittal Foundation has been a partner of Habitat for Humanity since 2008. The world's top steelmaker has teamed up with Habitat to build and renovate hundreds of homes as well as creating a groundbreaking steel-framed model for a durable, safe and affordable home. In addition to that, ArcelorMittal has been sending its employees to volunteer at Habitat projects around the world, in amongst other places, Senegal, Mexico, Argentina, Trinidad and Tobago and Macedonia.
