

This material has been copied under a DALRO licence and is not for resale or retransmission.

Fletcher is not just another hip-hop head

Moleboheng Chaha

VANDEBIJLPARK. - Born and raised in Mpumalanga Rabuti Mogoane (24), known to his fans as Fletcher Mog, is not just another hip hop head.

What makes Fletcher unique is the fact that education is the key foundation of his entire success.

His unique sound can get anyone instantly hooked on hip-hop music.

Fletcher, currently undertaking an apprenticeship in Electrical Engineering with ArcelorMittal, has released his first offering dubbed '#Tjalimpopo' directly translated "Of Limpopo origin". The album is dedicated to the people of Limpopo.

"I get my inspiration from my surroundings. I write about anything that people can relate to. Through my music, people will be able to hear that I learn from the situations I go through."

Fletcher states that another thing that makes him different is that he subscribes to what he learned in school:

"My music is in 'pedi' and I use idioms, metaphors, alliteration and sometimes will reference a classical 'pedi' novel or two."

The 12-track album consists of songs like 'Gae ke Limpopo', 'Ganyane Ganyane' and the title track '#Tjalimpopo'.

Two lucky people could win Fletcher's new album and two more will get a chance to feature in his first video shoot at the end of August.

To win simply SMS your name and surname to 45516.